

International health and development training for healthcare workers

Friday 13 – Sunday 15 October 2017, Achill Outdoor Education Centre, Achill Island, Co. Mayo

Are you interested in working in healthcare in less-developed countries?

An introductory training workshop is being organised by the Health Service Executive Global Health Programme, NUI Galway, Comhlámh, the Irish Forum for Global Health, Kimmage Development Studies Centre, University College Dublin, and ESTHER Ireland, with support from Irish Aid.

Who should attend?

The training workshop is designed for anyone working in any part of the Irish health service who is interested in working in healthcare in less-developed countries, along with those who have a general interest in the field of global health.

Why should you attend?

If you are interested in working in healthcare in less-developed countries, this training workshop will be a useful introduction. The workshop will introduce key issues in global health and the nature of healthcare in resource poor settings, and it will provide you with an opportunity to explore the skills and competencies you could bring to the sector. This course will be led by experienced trainers and facilitators from a range of organisations and backgrounds. (CME accreditation in progress.)

When, where and how long is the training workshop?

This two and a half day residential training workshop will be held at the Achill Outdoor Education Centre on Achill Island from Friday 13 – Sunday 15 October 2017.

Workshop Fee

€100 (includes accommodation, food, and training materials).

During this workshop, learners will:

- Gain understanding of key issues in global health
- Compare aspects of health / health outcomes / health systems in different parts of the world
 - Explore cross cultural issues in health and health care
- Examine their skills and competencies and considered needs for further development for working in this field
 - Question and learn from experienced development workers
